Cotton Pickers in Northern Cities

By Helen R. Peniston, in the Survey. Early last spring, when a marked change of color was felt, northern cities were turned to the South and West to import Negroes by the thousands. Railroads and industrial plants...

Estimates of the number of Negroes who have come north are... from the South and West... a half a million. So far there seem to be no trustworthy figures. Newark, it is said, had absorbed about 10,000. How many are living in the adjoining cities is not known.

At first the railroad and other companies furnished the transportation, and clothing agents all through the South, who painted in white and yellow, and who were highly colored—the high wages and advantages of the North. That apparently that was not long necessary. The news spread like wildfire...

When getting ready to crowd up the Negroes sold their simple belongings, and, in some instances, valuable land and property, and flocked to the northern cities, even though they had no objective work in mind. Enough money has been saved from their unprecedented wages to send for wives and children. Almost every day one may see in the streets a mother patiently, surrounded by bundles and babies and shivering in cotton garments, waiting for a sight to come, which will bring the news to meet them.

Several generations ago, when the Negro was a human chattel, the man who had a head and a hand and a brain did not properly show his slaves. He lost money by it and the industries of New Jersey have utterly failed to provide the housing for the Negro...

Canadian Compulsory Act A Failure

By Ralph M. Easley, Chairman Executive Council, the National Civic Federation, New York. When testifying recently before the senate committee on Interstate Commerce which was considering the advisability of the adoption by this country of a replica of the Canadian Compulsory Investigation Act as a means of preventing such an occurrence as the threatened railway workers' strike of last summer, I was asked whether, after fifteen years of dealing with strikes and lockouts, I was prepared to submit a concrete plan, the adoption of which would preclude a recurrence of the danger of a tie up of the railroads of the country through a walkout of employees.

I replied that fifteen years ago I could have given several such programs. One of them would have provided for compulsory arbitration, and another would have been the Canadian Act, but that remedy had been known at that time; but in fifteen years' experience I had found that many of the things which I had formerly been so cock-sure would not work when tried.

I am opposed to the adoption by Congress of any law patterned upon the Canadian Compulsory Investigation Act, because it will not fulfill the expectations of its advocates. Had the Canadian principle been in force here last summer, I am satisfied that the 400,000 members of the railway brotherhood would have been on strike in August instead of a conference at the White House. Although the legislation that resulted was only emergency legislation that neither side wanted, its avowed aim is at least that the strike did not take place, and that there is less likelihood of its occurring now than at that time.

When I say that the Canadian Act will not work in this country, I am basing the statement on the fact that it does not work in its own country. Since compulsory investigation has failed to stop strikes in a country with a practically homogeneous population no larger than that of Greater New York and vicinity, it surely could not have the desired effect in a country of 100,000,000 people of so different nationalities.

The trouble is that we have been accepting at face value the statement made by the promoters and administrators of the act, which is never a safe thing to do. While they point out that of 191 cases all but 20 were settled, they do not point out that 32,000 men, or 22 per cent, struck nevertheless. They do not point out that in the 191 disputes there were dozens of little strikes involving from 4 to 100 employees—sixty-three of these cases, to be exact—which could have been settled by any voluntary mediation board; but under the law the cumbersome and costly machinery of the national government had to be invoked for the four, the six, and then the ten employee class as well as for cases of real consequence. There were 100 cases for 250 employees and less; and the largest number in any one case involved was 8000—and they struck.

Twice as many labor disputes, involving five times as many employees, are settled by voluntary boards in New York City every year as all the disputes that the Canadian Compulsory Investigation Act has disposed of during its entire lifetime.

Here are a few "settlements" by the Canadian Board, which are typical of the twenty reported failures: Six thousand members of the United Mine Workers' Union struck against the Western Coal Operators' Association in defiance of the law. Afterwards they were persuaded to apply for a board, and an award was handed down that they did not like, so they struck again and tied up the mines for seven months.

In the Grand Trunk Railway dispute, with its 3000 conductors and trainmen, both sides were so displeased with the award that they began negotiations independently of the board. After a month of fruitless endeavor the men struck.

In the city of Toronto, in a dispute between the electric workers and the city-owned electrical works, the award favored the men, but the city refused to comply, and the men struck.

In a dispute between the Western Coal Operators' Association and 2100 miners, after the award was handed down neither side accepted, but began negotiations and worked out an agreement themselves, all of which looks very well in the report, were it not that the men had been on strike all the time, even before applying for a board, which was a violation of the law.

In a dispute between the British Columbia Telephone Company and its 321 electrical workers, the men struck without asking anybody's consent, so far as the records show. No attempt is ever made to enforce the penalty provided by the act, when the men strike without waiting for an investigation. The author of the Canadian law himself is official authority for the statement that the compulsory feature has made more law breakers than all the jails in the Dominion of Canada could hold. To jail ten or fifteen thousand men is neither a physical nor a political possibility in Canada, any more than it is a physical or a political possibility for the United States to jail 400,000 of the members of the railway brotherhoods in case we had the Canadian act and they struck in spite of it.—American Review of Reviews.

The Tools of Big Building

(Continued from Page 2) Most competent purchasing agents, highly efficient building superintendents, a permanent group of artisans and laborers—these and many other factors, human, mechanical and executive, have been welded into one strong, compact construction engine which guarantees clients the very best building that ingenuity can evolve for a stipulated sum.

In Now, fellow workers, you can see from this add, that this company has its men organized for its own welfare, creed, color, or nationality does not concern them; work in harmony for "US" is their "Motto." Look at these men who work on Sky scrapers—they are undoubtedly organized—for the boss—but when it comes to their own interests they are a sorry sight. There are thousands of men like that and when one is on strike the other is at work thereby helping defeat one another in wage wars.

Construction workers union No. 573 will have a convention in Omaha April 29 for the purpose of devising ways and means to get all construction workers into one big union, or, in other words, to follow out the plan of organization laid out by the Bankers' Realty Investment Co. They know that in organization is strength, the members of the A. W. O. know that in organization is strength and if you construction workers get together you will know that in organization is strength. So all together, boss for the big convention at Omaha, on the job, and off the job and above all things, make it a point to be there. MAT K. FOX

Health. Urged to city life, crowded conditions, the health of the household usually unsatisfactory. The news they have brought here all too small to be even they have been here for several months. The health department's report on the health of the city is not encouraging. It is unfortunate that these people have been allowed to come here without any advice as to how to live and keep themselves in health in this climate. The colored man has a natural disposition to chest diseases, such as tuberculosis and pneumonia, and the latter he falls to in easy victims. Dr. Craster said, long closed, undisputed buildings, also classed as unsatisfactory for habitation. They have been opened and rented to them. These houses have a high percentage of overcrowding, and the result is that the health inspectors report that wherever these conditions were discovered they directed the inhabitants to get better quarters and notified the owners of the premises, by written notice, that the rooms were not to be rented. They further recommended that a campaign should be instituted by the health department for better homes. They (the Negroes) have a simple, clean, and comfortable sort of people, who know no better.

It is all very well to tell them that they must not live in such abominable buildings, but ignorant as these people are, and many of them need instruction as to how to live in this climate and in a strange city, they are not very exception, and willing to move into decent homes and neighborhoods. There are decent homes for them to live in.

Many have burned their ships behind them, others had to be burned, and many came away from a desire to get away from parts of the South where race troubles are acute. All are dazzled by the lure of city life. They are here a day, and it is reported that thousands more are preparing to come in the spring.

There are nearly one million Negro farm operators in the South, and it is estimated that the total wealth of the Negroes of the United States is about one billion dollars. They own twenty-one million acres of land, or more than thirty-two per cent of the white man's acre greater than that of the state of South Carolina. The bulk of this wealth is being employed from the South and higher and secondary education are becoming out of the hands of the Negro. A Negro farmer at Albany, Georgia, is the owner of 10,000 acres of land, and his family resides on his plantation. A fourteen-year-old Negro boy on the farm is the champion corn grower of Mississippi in the first of the Bartlett Farm and School for Negroes at Dalton, Mo.

But while Negro farmers are 20 per cent of the total farmers in the South, Negro farm owners are still only 7 per cent of the total owners. The South is more prosperous today than she has ever been before, with diversified agriculture, expanded inevitable and a shortage of labor there, there is a lack of labor there, and the South can ill afford to lose a half million farm laborers who are needed in the southern climate. The Negro has made his best progress down South. The South has by laws and lock-ups, but by better wages and by more and better opportunities of profit sharing, and above all the cultivation of the spirit that will make it more and more possible for the Negro to accumulate property and to live in peace with his neighbors, especially his white neighbors. To that end it is hoped that the citizens of southern states will search and put into office each public official as the present governor of Kentucky.

On the other hand, there is no doubt that the Negro laborer from the South between the signs of twenty and thirty years of age, is able to compete successfully with the northern laborer if he becomes properly trained. But one cannot fail to see that the overcrowded, unwholesome and often squalid surroundings in which the little class of these people are often placed are sure to lead disastrously for them, and that the large number of workers of other advantages of city life can compensate. It is not entirely a problem. It is the city laborer. The Slav and Italian and Russian Jew face the same question which happens to be a Negro's merely because it is a matter of degree.

This migration is a disaster if it will show the people of this community the absolute necessity of getting together and not only to improve living conditions among these workers, but to begin to solve the whole problem of providing a proper housing for the great mass of the people whose labor in this country is the backbone of the nation.
