

PEKING PRIMARY SCHOOLS FORM REBEL COMMITTEES

Peking NCNA International Service in English 0630 GMT 9 Jan 68 B

[Text] Peking--Over 600 primary schools in Peking have set up revolutionary committees. This accounts for 70 percent of the primary schools in the city and the city's suburbs.

This is a result of the living study and application of Chairman Mao's works carried out by proletarian revolutionaries in the primary schools.

Ever since the primary schools reopened classes while carrying on the revolution, revolutionary cadres and teachers and leading members of the mass organizations, helped by Chinese People's Liberation Army men, have run study courses in Mao Tse-tung's thought.

They have concentrated on studying Chairman Mao's latest instructions and the brilliant "five constantly read articles" of Chairman Mao. By revealing their own selfish ideas and fighting self, revolutionary teachers and cadres freed themselves of factionalism and became close comrades in arms. This effectively promoted the creation of the revolutionary great alliance.

Because they made penetrating self-examinations and showed a firm desire to make ideological revolution, the cadres have the support of the masses.

The revolutionary committees includes representatives of pupils in the 5th and 6th forms, which will enable the pupils to play their role.

Under the leadership of the school revolutionary committees, revolutionary teachers and pupils are undertaking the living study and application of Mao Tse-tung's thought. While carrying on classes, they are making efforts to transform education as part of a new high tide in the proletarian revolution in education.